TEMPTATIONS...

6 months in and it already happened... got my first sort-of offer to leave this world of consulting behind and move to Atlanta and help an old GT friend with a startup. I said no.

For now at least. I moved to a whole new city for this job and I'm just now starting to feel good about my place in it, and I want to see at least one more year through here. That will also give the startup time to realize if it's gonna make it to another round of funding, and if they're still kicking it in a year, who knows maybe I have an easy-out back to my favorite city with my favorite people.

But this was a very big reality check for me, because I won't have this job forever. I do need to create some sort of roadmap for what I want to do in my life, where I want to do it, and most importantly who I want to do it with.

SHI THAT HAPPENED

- India Club friends came into town over the weekend! Had a great time with them, we walked around Georgetown and the mall and played games.
- I have to accept the nature of work in that there will be weeks where I get shit done and feel good, and other weeks where I feel useless. This was a get shit done week tho so I feel good.
- Called my brother earlier this week - he got done with his internship in SF and got a verbal return offer back to the company, very proud of him!
- Ok so for real I think we should read the Alchemist, it's one of those books that I thought was "deep" but only if you make it deep and I'm curious y'all's take

NIGHTMARE OF THE WEEK

When my India Club friends came into town, I did drink for the first time in a long time with them. And I honestly overdid it. My friend Maya introduced us to her new boyfriend and he bought me a shot at the bar we went to. I thought that was nice, so I bought him a shot as well to say thank you. He bought me another. I bought him another cuz I wasn't about to wake up to a Venmo request from this man. And one more round like that, at which point I was properly drunk. And also down like $60. Then on the way home the bus broke down so I had to split an Uber with a random white girl named Liz to get home at 3am.
