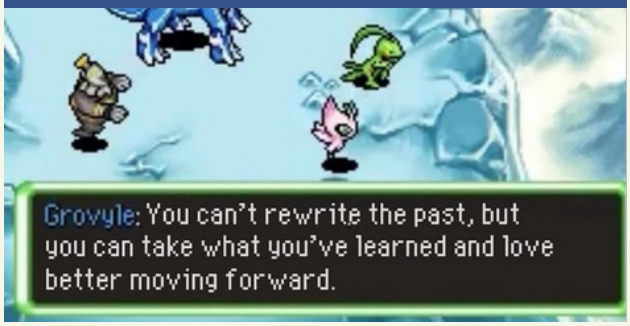
THE ART OF THE GOODBYE

So the Arbor Day party thing last Saturday got cancelled (hope Lex is doing okay), but one of the other dudes in the groupchat named Max invited us out to go out to a bar with his hometown friends.

These can get tricky, because you have to time your exit in such a way where they don't feel like you didn't have a good time, but where you aren't inviting yourself over to their place at the end of the night.

Man I timed it PERFECTLY. We met at the first bar and I introduced myself to everyone and had some small talk. We went to another bar and I could sense it wasn't the vibe. I got into one funny convo with 1-2 of the new guys I'd met, and then wrapped it up with one more heartfelt convo with Max just as I sensed that they were itching to find a better place. Left just as they started planning the third bar, very easy exit. Was home before midnight.

I am the Lebron James of leaving bars.



SHI THAT HAPPENED

- Had a pre-performance review chat with my director which gave me some very unexpected feedback. Like he said he was expecting me to have already reached out to the interns who are coming in... no one knows who the interns are yet they start in June...
- Great exit on Saturday
- Ananya took me to Tyson's Corner mall on Sunday, we got some good falafel and some good coffee and then went back to her place for some
- India Club friends are coming into DC this weekend and super excited to see them, it's felt like a rough week even tho I didn't even do that much work, so looking forward to a break

NO HANDS

Listen to this track, b*
Girl the way you're movin', got me in a trance
DJ turn me up, ladies this your jam
I'mma sip Moscato and you gon' lose them pants
Then I'mma throw this money while you do it with no hands
Girl drop it to the floor
I love the way your booty go (go, go)
All I wanna do is sit back and watch you move
And I'll proceed to throw this cash (what)
