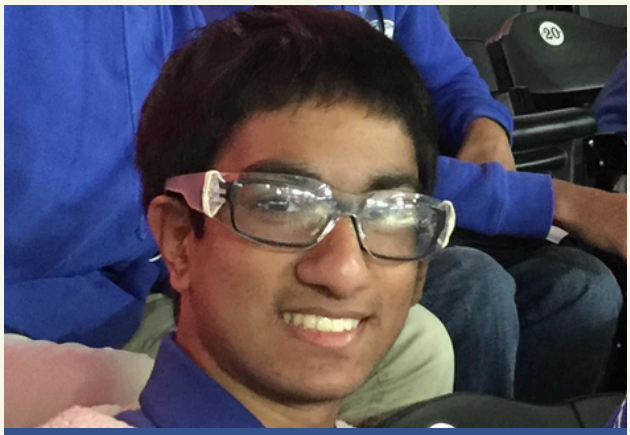
TEJAS SHAH

FEBRUARY 5, 2026 ISSUE #24



INSPIRATIONAL ITEMS

Visited some old family friends this weekend, as pictured to the right (the auntie to the left went to high school with my grandfather in Mumbai). I also met her brother who is 77 years old and battling cancer (not pictured).

This was legitimately one of the most touching moments of my life. He did not look good. His legs are skinnier than a dasani bottle and he has bulbs of pus all over his body.

But he walked up the stairs all by himself. When we ate dinner, I tried to make his plate and just told him to sit, and he insisted on serving himself. And he could barely speak but he still spoke anyways. In his words “He is more stubborn than cancer”.

I tend to find myself in a defeatist attitude from time-to-time over some small stuff, and he’s fighting one of the toughest battles possible and he’s handling it with incredible swag and grace. I hope he beats that shit, but he knows he will.

SHI THAT HAPPENED

Good

- Improving more and more at Viola
- Super Bowl party on Sunday!
- I actually met a girl two weeks ago, had a first date on MLK day and then a second date that went well, so third date is this Saturday. She’s refreshingly different from all the other girls I’ve met thus far, and I actually feel really good about things. If shit tanks this weekend y’all will never hear abt my dating life again bc the evidence at that point will suggest that mentioning a girl in a newsletter is an undeniable jinx.

Bad

- Finding myself getting a bit lazier and complacent about work, I need to course-correct myself asap
- Sick asf and lowkey have to be better by tomorrow cuz I have a presentation

NIGHTMARE OF THE WEEK

Honestly getting kicked from that Robolions GitHub fucked me up. Lately I’ve been feeling really nostalgic about life in GA, and man it feels like everyone has just moved on from me. I have to admit I expected more India Club calls by now. It’s been a year since I’ve heard from FoodFinder. Every initiative that I’ve worked towards in my life is functioning without me, and I’m glad for them but at the same time I feel like a “rookie” again in this new company, new city, new friends, etc and my confidence has taken a hit bc of that. It’ll take time to get back there.