PHILOSOPHICAL PONDERINGS

Turns out I have more deep thoughts than I do solid music recommendations.

Anyways as I get close to my actual job starting, I am reflecting on these past 5 months of "joblessness". Everyone had a different idea of what I should be doing with my time: travel, party, make money, be with family. I did a little bit of everything but I don't really feel fulfilled. I feel the same way I did the day after graduation: "Can this damn job start already so I can have a purpose". And that's really it: since I left India Club I haven't had a singular goal that I've worked towards or a singular purpose to wake up for. I don't think I was made for this "chilling and exploring new things" lifestyle. I need reliable and constant progress towards something like Robotics or India Club gave me to feel fulfilled. I'm optimistic because I think PwC could be that!

SHI THAT HAPPENED

Good

- He's never gonna give me up, let me down, run around OR desert me!!!
- Actually went on a Hinge date that went REALLY well. Hoping to get a 2nd date cuz she's actually a great match.
- Met this dude from Johns Creek who moved here too and he's pretty chill
- Made some really good channa masala with my roommate

Bad

- Korea doesn't exist :(
- Saw the movie "Him" which was the 2nd most disappointing movie I've ever seen (1st was the Minecraft Movie)
- Lost this week in both of my fantasy leagues, really worried Ashton Jeanty was a bust pick and I have him in both
- Spending too much time indoors

NIGHTMARE OF THE WEEK

I got an email saying that I was part of the Diligence team and that I needed to cancel my registration/flight to New Jersey immediately. I was sure I was on the Deals team (not Diligence), so I called my recruiter and asked her if I was supposed to get that email. I was not. Had I followed that email, I would have cancelled my entire first week of real work and not shown up to multiple client meetings. Luckily I asked before I cancelled it all but dude you can't play with my livelihood like that.
