PHILOSOPHICAL PONDERINGS

Life feels like such a blur right now. It literally feels like the day escapes me, and I never have quite enough time to do everything. In a way it's great for me - I don't really scroll as much and I'm a lot more conscious of going from one thing to the next.

But things are slipping through the cracks. My mom will call me after weeks of no contact and I'll feel horrible. Raheel's brother moved into DC in January - I still haven't found time to even see him. I used to spend every day at GT with the guy in the photo above and now we just texted for the first time since graduation. I can't tell if this was expected in the process of moving on or if I'm genuinely being a bad person to these people. Probably a bit of both honestly. I don't have a resolution here yet, but the first step in solving a problem is realizing there is one.

SHI THAT HAPPENED

- Went to Boston with friends from GT! Was nice to see everyone finally, see below picture for how we felt after the best Italian food I've ever had
- Went to Philly for work, and got a little stuffed Sloth from UPenn for Ananya
- Gonna go see the Cherry Blossoms this weekend and give Sloth to Ananya
- In the FINAL stages of my project at work and SO excited to be doing something different, I'm starting on a new type of work tomorrow similar to my business from last year, so I feel a lot more confident about this one!
- Got scooter registration sorted and it's getting warm again so I'm starting to ride the scooter again

NIGHTMARE OF THE WEEK

I was heading back to the train station on Sunday from Boston (friend trip) to go to Philly (work trip), and one of my friends could see in my eyes that I had the "Sunday Scaries". I was actually pretty antisocial for the last couple of hours in Boston on Sunday cuz my mind was just stuck on what was gonna go down on Monday. I wish I could've turned that part of my brain off and just enjoyed the limited time I had with people, but that's just not how I operate. The beautiful thing is that my friends accepted that about me and still made it a great time anyways.
