PHILOSOPHICAL PONDERINGS

All the parts of the move that I thought would be easy are hard and all the hard ones are easy. Meeting people is lowkey easy. I have like 3 dates already lined up and I've actually already met a decent amount of chill people through friends and online stuff.

But the move-in process was ass, the whole metro/transportation scene to get anywhere from my place lowkey sucks, and in general the whole city has a very dead and inhospitable vibe. Like it's actually not very pleasant to walk around or scooter around, every block there is someone getting arrested or some siren going off. It's like lowkey Gotham out here.

SHI THAT HAPPENED

Good

- Moved to DC 👍
- Scooter is SOOO fun lowkey the scooter is what's keeping me going rn
- Met cool Amazon people thru friend
- Apartment is nice
- Roommate is super chill and cool
- The DC Hinge scene is INCREDIBLE

Bad

- Moved to DC 🇵🇪
- Met some interesting people through my dad, had to endure some really painful conversations
- Was gonna get a job at the AT&T store but they only had shifts on weekend evenings which like no
- I miss Atlanta man so much man

NIGHTMARE OF THE WEEK

It's more of an existential nightmare this week but like what am I doing in DC man. Why do I have to be here. I could write Python scripts and do statistical models from anywhere. In general I don't really understand why in 2025 we have to relocate anywhere for technical jobs which could be done from anywhere. These millionaires are like playing Barbie with new-grads by just randomly putting them wherever for the hell of it. Idk maybe DC will grow on me.
