Newsletter 29 – Tejas Shah

Yo another low effort newsletter for today because I'm tired.

1. Had a great time in Atlanta! All in all a much better trip than Thanksgiving Break
    a. Shoutout Kunj for hosting and prepping DnD that was a great way to get everyone back together.
    b. Shoutout India Club at Georgia Tech for hosting the Holi Show again without me and letting me backstage so I could talk to everyone I've been missing.
    c. Shoutout other GT friends for actually making time to meet up this time
    d. Shoutout my grandparents for making dinner for me and imparting valuable wisdom about how to deal with life.
    e. Shoutout my brother for dancing in the aforementioned Holi Show and making it a good time.
    f. Shoutout my parents for letting me stay at their house and spending quality time.
    g. Shoutout Delta Air Lines for cancelling my flight from ATL back to DC causing me to have to rush to the airport to make an earlier flight… oh wait screw you guys I didn't even want to get a return offer from yall anyways.
2. Work has been more rewarding than it's ever been, really finding my groove in putting out deliverables and getting reviews
3. Have Lex's famous Arbor Day party this weekend which I am looking forward to because I haven't actually hung out with friends in a long time
    a. Clarification – yes I did just very recently hang out with you guys. This statement reflects the fact that you guys are not my friends.
4. Finally also got a chance to grab dinner with someone from for the first time. Everyone else I know's main social circle was work people and I've always been pretty bummed that the whole work friend group thing never took off for me, but this felt good.
5. Getting closer to my goal of running to the white house and back without needing to stop, I genuinely just need better shoes and I think I'm not that far from it
    a. Further than ever from my benching goal I have not been eating that much Idk bro Atlanta emotionally wrecked me because I did all the things I miss doing but I have some things going for me here so it's not that bad.

Peace and love, Tejas Shah