VALENTINE'S VISIONS

We're just gonna call the girl I'm talking to "Venmo" for simplicity. It was either that or calling her "Rawdog" which no.

In past newsletters, I've described some of the decent dates I've had which just didn't work out and it took meeting someone like Venmo to understand why. They simply weren't good fits, and I was subconsciously trying to modify the portrayal of elements of myself to try and "make" it a good fit. I've had enough experiences by now to where I can relate to anyone on some level, but it's not actually my same vibe. And they could definitely tell.

Not only does Venmo not force me into that "re-dressing" of my personality by meeting me where I'm at, she also clearly wants this to work. She came to the super bowl party and there were certainly times when I went up to talk to someone else, and she genuinely was able to still vibe with everyone else and have a good time. All in all going really well!

SHI THAT HAPPENED

- W Board Game Date
  - W Person
  - L at Connect Four
- W Super Bowl Party
  - W friends getting along
  - L Drake Maye
- W Tampa Trip for work
  - W Weather
  - L Work actually done in Tampa
- W/L Dad in town, we'll see how it goes lol but should be a fun time!

NIGHTMARE OF THE WEEK

I made a mistake at work. Essentially we had a deliverable which was being made in a certain way and back in December I had missed a key step in building that deliverable and we only found out yesterday. The issue has been fixed and we have yet to send it out but I feel really bad. The last one I had mentioned in the newsletter wasn't really my fault, but this one definitely was. Not much else to say about it, I just really need to start taking my time and being very cautious about my work to avoid these stupid kinds of things again.
