

TEJAS SHAH

JUNE 11, 2026

ISSUE #37

EXALM

Sorry I'm in a real middle school vibe for some reason right now

Someone this week reminded me that I used to make Video Games back in middle school.

While it's no "Peter Dress-Up Simulator", one of these games I made back in 7th grade was actually submitted and made it as a finalist for a National STEM Video Game Challenge.

I won't spoil too much of the plot, but would encourage you to give it a playthrough. Overall I'm pretty proud of the character design, world-building, and clever gimmicks here and there. The combat is honestly pretty bad but I had a good time making it and that's all that matters.

Also the soundtrack is pretty incredible if I do say so myself.

It's as if you're trading your own memories with other people.

SHI THAT HAPPENED

- Lots of work what else is new
- Had a cute Georgetown date this past weekend and saw some ducks (or geese? honestly not sure)
- Watched basketball game with friends on Monday, lots of shots taken on-court - there was one off-court shot that I was kinda hoping someone might take but seems like he just got in a good nap

NANI (AKA GRANDMOTHER)

Just wanted to give a quick shoutout to my Nani (which means Grandmother) in Hindi.

5 years ago today she unfortunately passed away unexpectedly. She was a very kind and gentle soul, always very selfless and interested in everyone else's wellbeing. She was a teacher by profession her whole life, taking care of many generations of kids and helping them understand how to navigate the world. Spending summers with her was like the world's best summer camp, and I really miss those times.

Rest in peace Nani 🙏