THE SCOUTING APP

My current work project is actually very similar to this app I built in high school, so for the 3 of you who never witnessed the greatness:

The 1261 Scouting App was a proprietary application written from scratch by 14 year old Tejas to help our robotics team collect and analyze data on other teams at competitions. The app featured a sleek, mobile-first frontend, a powerful Python-run backed, and a state-of-the-art-ish MongoDB JSON database.

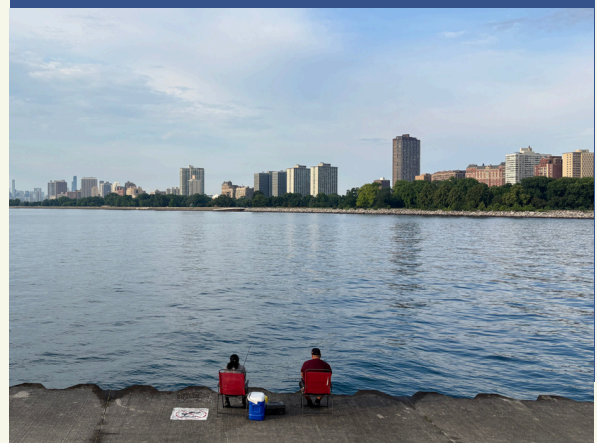

Most importantly, when you entered in all of your data like a good little scout, you got to see a funny meme.

It also actually had a pretty intense scoring algorithm in the backend too and it's actually pretty validating to see that in ~7 years, the answer to this problem in the real world is the exact same as I had come up with on my own in 2019. Anyways will drop a link for more info.

SHI THAT HAPPENED

- Turned 24 - thanks for all the gifts and wishes guys!
- Got Meta Glasses guys they're so sick the microphone is phenomenal
- Quick family trip to Chicago was super fun - Obama Center, Ran a 5K, Hello Kitty sucks (see below)
- New work project is challenging yet rewarding

NIGHTMARE OF THE WEEK NAMED HELLO KITTY

My mom is a huge hello kitty fan. Luckily for us, there is a Hello Kitty Cafe in Chicago! Unluckily for us Hello Kitty is a satanic demon spawn who crushes dreams.

Here are the requirements to enter HK Cafe:

1. Go to the cafe and scan the QR code to join the 150-person long virtual queue
2. All members of your party must join the virtual queue separately and might not enter at the same time as you
3. It can take 2-3 hours to get to the front of the virtual queue, at which point you have 15min to get from wherever you are in Chicago to Hello Kitty Cafe
4. If you don't make it you start over
5. Then you wait in another hour long line and only get 30mins inside the cafe
